Analysis, Insights & Visualization

Now the real question is how to visualize all the data we have extracted
from the data set?

Pie Chart

Lets assume the user entered Morgan Freeman as an actor and we need as many as different ideas of data visualization methods as possible. the program will search for Morgan Freeman in all the data and for instance it finds 108 movies with Morgan Freeman in them. now, the program will search Genres column for each and every single movie we found and it counts each genres to find how many times Freeman has acted a Comedy or a Drama or any other genres.

Line Chart

Lets assume the user entered Morgan Freeman as an actor and we need as many as different data visualization methods as possible.

this time we aim to visualize his average audience movies rate (1-100)(Y Axis) base on the data set and to compare his 4 main popular genres in terms of rating between 2010 and 2020 (X Axis).

Bar Chart

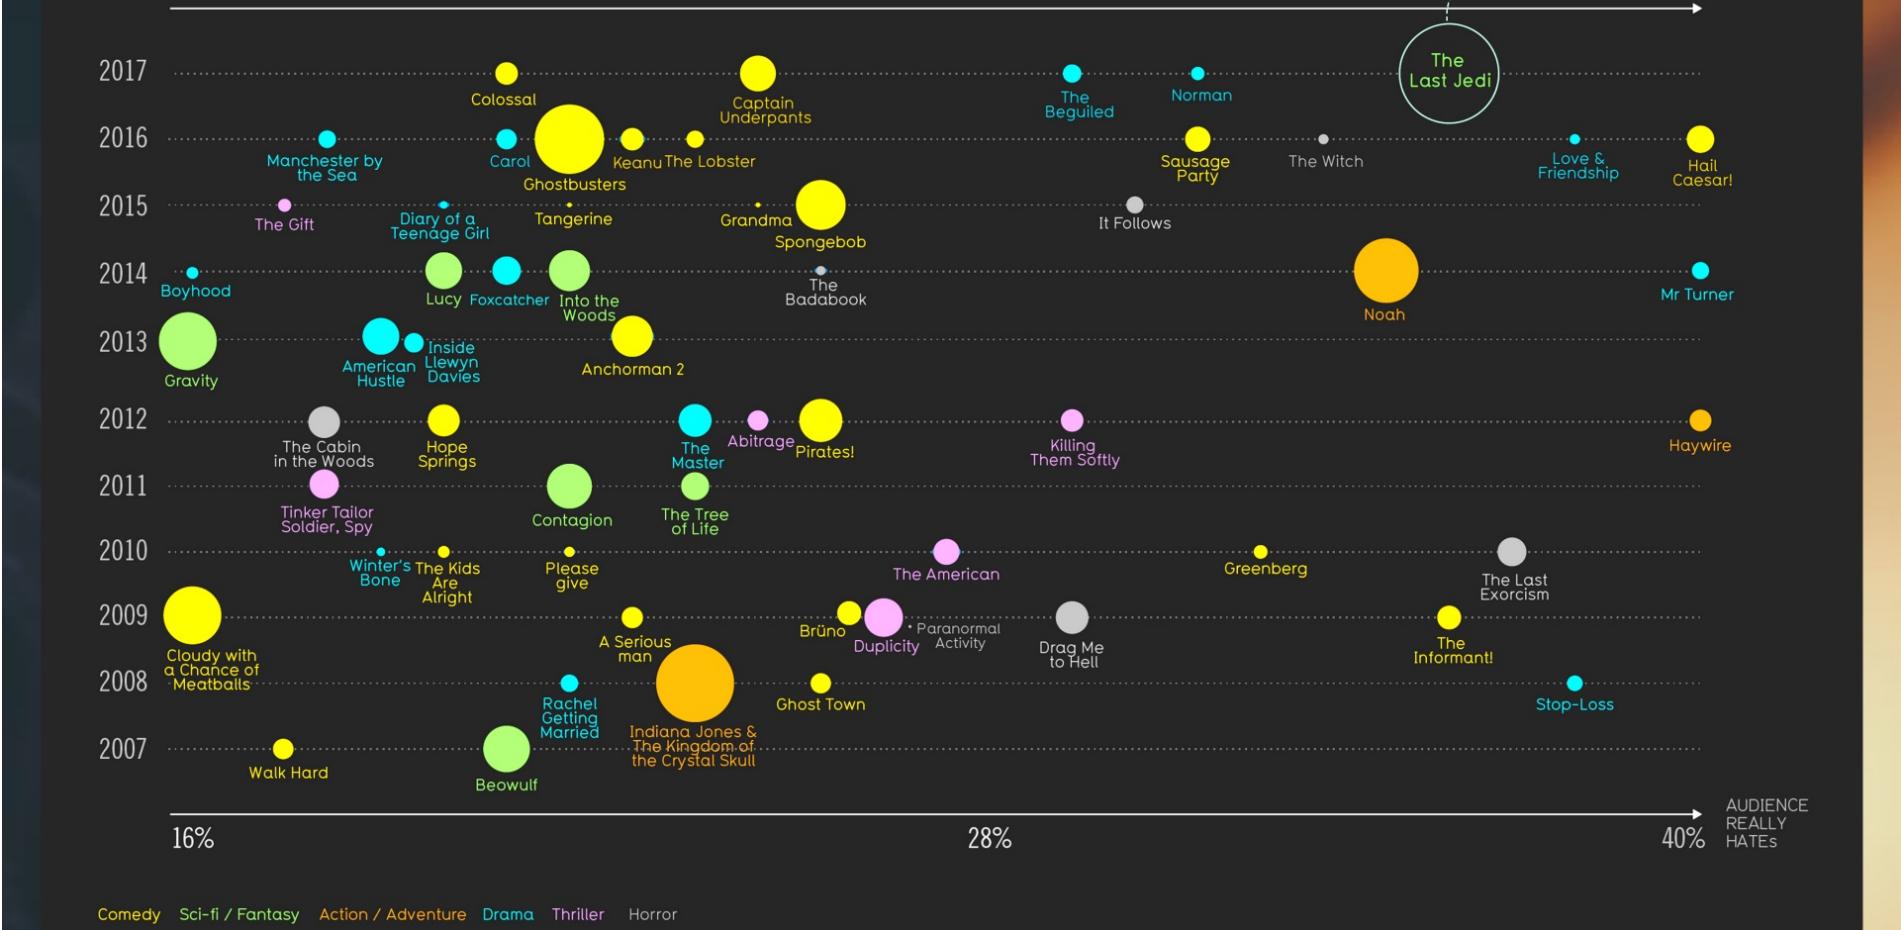

Next method we can use to visualize the data is by a bar chart. this bar chart here represents a comparison between 5 most famous actors and their Rotten-tomatoes rates. for example, Morgan Freeman has 108 movies in our data set, each movie has a Rotten Tomatoes rate (Rotten, Certified-Fresh, Fresh), in this case, Freeman movies has received Rotten 9 times, Certified-Fresh 38 times and Fresh 61 times. But there are some more complicated visual diagram to represent the data too.

ed-Fresh 38 times and
